

Little Moments

Sarah Ward

The spaces we create are precious incarnations of our own mind and memories. My work divulges those internal narratives of my own consciences and seeks to create environments for others to discover and explore. This passion of exploration comes from a childlike sense of wonder that engulfs me when investigating these little moments, we come across in our everyday lives. Learning to notice and investigate these moments enriches life by allowing people to appreciate all the small things around them.

This body of work explores the landscape of the consciousness and self-expression. Every environment revolves around a central character. These characters shape their setting and those settings bring them to life. The curation of these pieces is highly mediative and a personal exploration of self. I strive for my work to be confessional, not confrontational. The viewer is provided a window into myself, although it may not be traditionally presented as such.
